Lore

The "Murder Castle" maze hotel is a trap ruled by a mad doorman named Host. He is convinced that no guest or employee should ever leave this place alive. On Halloween, you, the hotel's head chef, were peacefully carving a pumpkin in the kitchen until Host snuck up behind you. But instead of kicking the bucket, your soul leaped straight into a freshly carved jack-o'-lantern sitting on the counter.

Now you are a living pumpkin flying through the corridors. The killer knows you have possessed the pumpkin and is trying to catch you to smash you once and for all. Your only chance to break free is to assemble the key to the main doors. Its shards are hidden within altars left behind by other unfortunate guests and kitchen staff.

To open an altar and retrieve a piece of the key, you must ignite it with your own soul. Because of this, the light inside the pumpkin gradually fades.

Ending Options:

1. Defeat (Bon Appétit): On a porcelain plate lies a fragrant pumpkin pie–an ironic masterpiece baked from your own body. It is still gently steaming with a subtle orange glow. Host slowly cuts a slice, tastes it, contentedly smiles.
2. Victory: You collect the final shard, the key comes together, and the hotel doors open. The pumpkin simply flies out into the street–intact, free, and alive. Host trots after you, but fails to reach you in time and stops at the threshold, glaring furiously after you. You have escaped the "Murder Castle," and your soul will now find the peace it deserves.